

THE ORANGE DIDN'T FADE TO YELLOW WHEN SYRACUSE REGISTERED SHUTOUT OVER RUTGERS

SYRACUSE'S AERIAL GAME SENT RUTGERS ELEVEN TO DEFEAT

Sanford's Old-Style Football, Featuring Line Bucking, Had No Chance Against Modern Attack Employed by Conquerors of Warner's Pitt Team

AERIAL football triumphed over the old line-smashing attack yesterday when Syracuse walloped Rutgers 14 to 0 on the Polo Grounds.

The big Scarlet team from the banks of the old Raritan tried to put over something that might have made a hit in the dim, distant past, but in 1919, A. D., it couldn't be done.

For two periods Syracuse was held without a score, but in that time the weaknesses of Rutgers were discovered and between the halves Buck O'Neil handed the boys some valuable advice.

"Open up and forward those guys to death," he ordered, and they did that very thing.

Only three minutes had elapsed when Syracuse called a play which had every appearance of an end run.

Schwartz, the right end, was on the 10-yard line, all alone, and the oval sailed straight into his arms.

Ackley and Schwartz made an ideal team, for the latter is one of the best receivers in the game.

AS SOON as Schwartz and Ackley put on their act it was all off with Rutgers, and the result of the game was as much in doubt as the election in Philadelphia yesterday.

Sanford's Close-Formation Attack Fails

IN JUSTICE to Rutgers, let it be said that the team is far inferior to those of the last three years.

The only trouble with this play was it failed to gain because of the admirable defensive work of Alexander and Gulick, the guards, and Robertson, who played a roving center.

Poor generalship made Sanford's team look very sad and forced them to do considerable punting.

To my mind, the effectiveness of the close formation was lost because nothing was done to drive back the secondary defense.

One man on the Rutgers team stood out, and that was Garrett, the captain. This young man played end on the attack and roving center on the defense.

ROBERTSON played well for Syracuse and looks like the best center of the year.

Fuller Looks for Tigers to Beat Harvard

AN INTERESTED spectator in the stands was Myron E. Fuller, the old Yale guard, who now is line coach at West Virginia.

The big line coach, however, has a hunch that Princeton will beat Harvard next Saturday.

West Virginia has a good team, as everybody knows, and they had their backs to the wall last Saturday.

Fuller is well known in Philadelphia. He coached at Haverford school in 1916 and had charge of the Swarthmore College line in 1917.

"I DO hope nobody gets hurt," said the student sorrowfully.

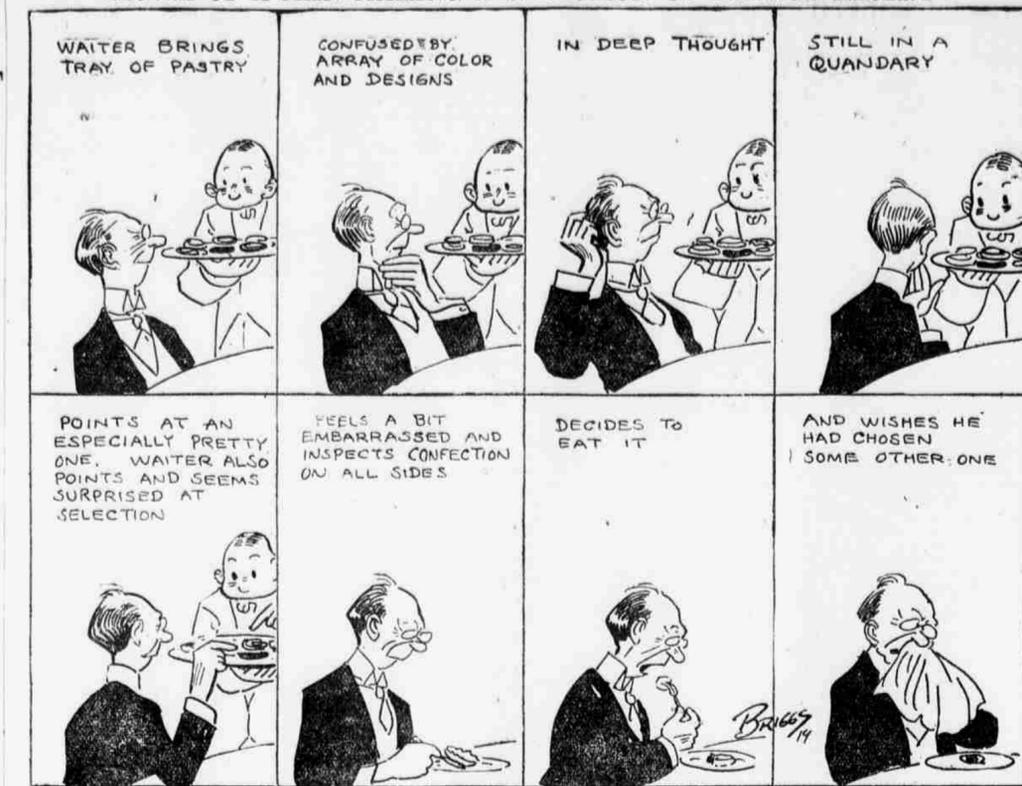

Not Cinch for Harvard

HERE in New York there is a feeling that Harvard will not have an easy time with Princeton next Saturday.

There's some dope to chew on. Remember, we are not predicting a defeat for Harvard next Saturday.

YOU can't say the same about Harvard. The team hasn't been scored on yet and Princeton has been beaten twice; but as we all know, you never can tell what will happen in football.

HONORS TO HARVARD FOR HAVING SERIES OF BACKFIELD STARS

It Is Doubtful if Any University Ever Had Such a Succession of Brilliant Backs as Brickley, Mahan and Casey—Michigan Boasts Many Heroes

Upsets

My legends are bromidic. Take the tortoise and the hare. The former was the sucker of this ill-assorted pair.

Columbus was a featherbrain; and only one in all The courts of Europe backed him when he claimed the earth a ball.

Peary never saw the pole. To tell the world this fact Doc Cook went touring and the world acclaimed his little act.

Willie shook his fist a lot. He aimed to bluff the crowd, And figured John and Sam and all the other boys were cowed.

Cincinnati was a joke. The home and other crowds Sat waiting for the team to take a tumble from the clouds.

Through years gone by, and years to come, when Sentiment holds sway Above the rule of Reason in this Realm of errant play.

And egg us on to try again to cross the well-known dope.

LESTER ALAN TAYLOR.

Harvard Backs

IN 1910 Harvard had Corbett as a backfield star and in 1911 the Crimson had Wendell.

But it was in 1912 that Harvard began to uncover one star after another with a completed list for five playing seasons that never has been equaled.

HE MAY be neck and neck with his two successors by the time the Princeton and Yale games are ready for the official records of old Doc Time.

Michigan Close

MICHIGAN was not far behind this Harvard array between 1901 and 1906, when the Maize and Blue had Heston, Weeks, Hammond and Garrels.

OR note for all-around backfield greatness still goes to Jim Thorpe.

The Year's Star Showman

BABE RUTH not only smashed the home-run record, he also proved to be the greatest showman in baseball history.

The average star rarely excites any brilliant gleam when a big crowd is present or when the occasion is noteworthy.
